- Ashokasundari

- S-R-g-M-P-D-n-S (=Hemavati)
 - [Moumita Mitra | another] "New Raag Ashokasundari; The story behind it: While practising Madhukauns I desperately wanted to use Dha and Re in avroh, but could not figure out which scale it was. was sure that there should be a similar Ragam or Mel in Carnatic Music, Kavitha Shibu Aunty again was a saviour who told that the Carnatic Mela Hemavati is the Sampurna scale of this...I was trying SgMPDnS and sampurna avroh like we do in Madhuvanti. Hence the new Raag came up. Regarding the strange name Ashokasundari: Hemavati is Goddess Parvati's name and since this raag originated from Hemavati, hence it could be the daughter of Parvati: and Parvati's eldest daughter's name was Ashokasundari. This movement explores Indian rhythm in a folk context, and the centre of the movement contains a beautiful contrasting alap (non-rhythmic) section for the solo sitar. Indian rhythmic cycles are then explored by individual sections of the orchestra. Ever the innovator, Ravi Shankar explores them in a way never before attempted by a Western orchestra: there is a surprise in store towards the end of the work”

The invocation of Raga Basanta Pancham, therefore, is a splendid choice for the evening. The raga is rarely available in vocal khayal form, though some instrumentalists have tried to crack the code of this near-extinct species. Their versions, as it normally happens, differ. Here we find a unique mood of Basant Pancham in a vocal khayal composed by Ruchira Panda, by applying the note Pancham to another rare raga Adi Basant (Carnatic Vasantha). The result is the spirit of a spring that is a riot of colors, yet with a tinge of something or somebody missing in the celebration." (as 'Adi Basant + Pa'; Ma-kan)

 - NSrg = Shuddh Todi or Miyanki Todi
 - SrgP mgrgrS rgm rgrS = Bilaskhani Todi
 - SrgmPDmP rgPm rgrS = Ahiri Todi

The SmP or SD phrase in Bhatiyar was an addition by myself to give a stronger Bhatiyar feel. P acts as a bridge between the two angas. In Bhairav Bhatiyar it's easier to blend the two Raagas due to the presence of Shuddh Ga common to both.

- “While [creating] Bhatiyari Todi I also went through Bhairav Bhatiyar on your website to compare...its easier to handle Bhatiyar Bhairav because of presence of shuddha Ga, komal Ga in Bhatiyari Todi has a conflict of expression with Bhatiyar, which demands shuddha Ga - but we are forced to use Komal Ga”

Both the Ragas are of female nature, and therefore, Raga Gun-Lalit is also considered a Ragini. The ascending and descending of this Ragini can be in any of the pre-mentioned Raginis. Because of the combination of either way, this Ragini is complex by nature. Usage of the Chalan of this Ragini requires a concentrated mind. To get a clearer idea about the nature of the Ragini, go through the given Swar phrases. Hence, this is born from Poorvi Thaata, Teevra Madhyam is used. The use of Gunkari resembles the characteristics of Raga Bhairav, and in the middle, there can be slight colors of Raga Komal Rishabh Asavari. This Ragini can be considered as Uttarangvadi & Uttarangpradhan. Also, this is more suitable in a way of Meend and Gamak. Using Taan will be difficult, and the Bhakti & Karuna Ras will disappear by using Taan...RMPD, Ś, RND, MND, MD, MMG, MRMPD, Ś" is the catchment phrase. Ascending can be either S, RM, PDS or RND, MD, NŚ, while descending can be either ŚD, PM, R S or RND, MDN, MMG, MGRS. The well-concentrated usage of these four phrases in Vilambit and Madhyalaya will give the proper intonation of this Ragini. Usage of DPMMG and GMMPD are prohibited in this Ragini. The Late Pandit Nikhil Bannerjee, who was also a disciple of my grandfather and a student of my father, Ustad Ali Akbar Khan, played Gunji Kanada which he learned from them. It is on a cassette recording which we have. In the mid-1970's, Ravi Shankar performed this raga in Berkeley, California.  - [Farhan email] It seems that the same scale may have the alternate names of 'Jnankali' (Akhil Jobanputra) and 'Dhyankali' (Biswarup Ghosh Dastidar) | Aha. 'Jnaan' is a more accurate/traditional Hindi to English transcription of the word usually written as 'Gyaan'. 'Dhyaankali' is likely a misinterpretation of the name... 'Gyaan' is 'knowledge' and hence 'gyaani' is she/he who is knowledgeable... 'Dhyaan' is a different word, meaning (context-dependently) 'attention', 'care', 'awareness' or even 'meditation'.

 - [Vivek Khadilkar] “A rare late night raga. In the late 1960s, when Pt. Manikbua Thakurdas directed music for the Marathi play ‘Baiju’, he used Kaumudi in the song ‘Baharla Rani Ruturaj’ sung by Pt. Udayraj Godbole, which was very popular & highly appreciated...Although an audav raga [?], in avroh, Kaumudi uses komal gandhar in a vakra way. It omits Pa completely. Sensing, as it were, the eager curiosity of his listeners, he explained that the melodic theme was taught to him by his father in his childhood as an elementary exercise to enable him to acquire a thorough grip over the shuddha swaras of the saptak. True enough, it was a gat composition cast in the mould which was composed of all shuddha swaras. In its build-up, it presented an uncanny amalgam of the ingredients from Chayanat, Tilak Kamod, and Yaman. This charming innovation of Lom-Nat had all the dignity and charm of a time-honoured traditional raga."

 - [Sourya Dev email 2026] “I conversed about Raag Madhuswaravali with my guruji [Pt. Debendra Narayan Satapathy]. It turned out he'd learnt it from his guru, who learnt it from its creator Bhavrang himself [Pt. Balwant Rai Bhatt]. He also had his Bhavrang Lahiri series, which are like an expansion of the Sangeetanjali by [Bhavrang's guru] Pt. Omkarnath Thakur. The raga is listed in the 3rd volume - here is my translation of the information: “Experts are aware of the raga Multani Dhanashree, among the special ragas of the Gwalior tradition. Madhuswaravali has been created by discarding the Re-Dha from it. In Multani Dhanashree, both the Nishads are used alongside both Madhyams, but Madhuswaravali uses only the komal Nishad. The chalan phrases Sg(m)M(P), PgmGsnS evoke the spirit of Madhuswaravali, with the sweet addition of gandhar enhancing the raga's beauty. Tivra Madhyam is comparatively more used than Shuddha Madhyam, Gandhar and Pancham serve as nyas, and Nishad and Gandhar are graha...A delight to the hearing, Madhuswaravali is idyllic in the evening”. Dev adds that “there appears to be no written evidence of the two khayals my guruji has performed (Suran ko sadh le & Mana mandira shyam aaye), which appear to be passed down orally, since Pt. Rahul Bhatt's rendition also has the same bandish.” [images in email]

 - [Ravi Shankar & Ali Akbar Khan] in Craske; mixed use of both Dha as kan outside gats; also ga-kan and other mishra touches
 - is it really distinct from Palas?
 - [1998 RMIC: Aashish Khan?] 2. Raag: PALAS KAFI, is a joint composition of my father and Ravi Shankar. I produced, mixed and edited this LP for HMV Calcutta, India in 1960. I remember very clearly the entire recording session. The Late Pandit Kanai Dutt was playing tabla for this recording. Regarding the composition of the gat (theme), I remember that they were both giving ideas to each other and changing the melodic line of the gat. The melodic lines which my father was composing for the gat, were getting difficult for Ravi Shankar to play, because they were technically too difficult for him to reproduce on sitar. The first melodic line of the gat was composed by Ravi Shankar and the second melodic line of the gat was composed by my father. The variations within the performance were composed on the spot by each artist, therefore this raga is truly a collaboration. I still remember the very beautiful melodic lines. If you listen to that composition, especially when my father is playing the gat alone, he is playing in his own sarod style but he had to simplify it for Ravi Shankar. We just recently learned that this same album received a Gold Disc in 1972 but no one ever told my father, and Ravi Shankar never mentioned my father's name, nor did he share the award with him. This is not the only time when they have played a duet and my father had to sacrifice and compromise in the playing and in the concert sound system. In the film Concert for Bangladesh, you can hear how badly his sarod was balanced in comparison to sitar. This is the reason my father stopped playing duets with Ravi Shankar after their last performance in Montpellier, France.

- [RMIC/Parrikar] “There are at least two ragas that go by the name Saugandh/Sugandh. One is a creation of Allaiddin Khan of Maihar. The other is played by Sabri Khan and his son (Kamal?) on sarangi. I presume you heard the latter type of Saugandh. From what I remember (I have heard only the son's version), it is grounded in the Carnatic melakarta Hemavati. Madhuvanti employs the shuddha nishad (although some may occasionally take in the komal nishad the shuddha nishad is pradhana). The chalan of Saugandh may, prima facie, sound Madhuvanti-like on account of the the alpatva of R and D in aroha sancharis but the overall personality and effect projected are quite different. I recall capturing an abhasa of both Madhuvanti and Bhimpalasi.”

Saugandh has also been recorded by Sabri Khan / Kamal Sabri, but as far as I can tell there are no non-sarangi renditions."

clutching a gaily-coloured [can of] Kingfisher, his sumptuous belvedere adorned with a garden gnome. Questionably, Bhatkande classified rāg Vindaloo under Paneer thaat. It had already appeared by the 18th century in the bold attempt of picaresque, nay swashbuckling, adventurer and arms-dealer Lord Auberon Cholmondeley-Smythe to codify the repertoire, notwithstanding his comment in the Prefatory Observations that “it all sounds the same to me, this Indian music”. In dhrupad renditions the nomtom syllables tiddley-pom and poppadom are prominent. As to arohana and avarohana patterns, whereas in ascent flat and natural re, ga, dha, and ni, natural and sharp ma may be sounded interminably and apparently at random, in descent all notes are avoided entirely...”
